Q: How to pass a path to svn I'm using svn version 1.7.1. I need to pass a path to a svn commit. This is not working: `svn commit -m "Message" /usr/local/svn/test/somepath` My repository is in `/usr/local/svn`. The test directory is: `/usr/local/svn/test/somepath`
A: The command-line option `-m` can only be used with files. It does not accept directories. If you want to commit the contents of `somepath`, then you'll have to create a file with all the content of `somepath`, and then you can use the `-m` option. First you'll need to check whether `somepath` itself is a directory, and if it is, you'll first have to make it a file by adding an entry. to the directory. So instead of `svn commit -m "Message" /usr/local/svn/test/somepath` you can do this: `svn commit -m "Message" /usr/local/svn/test/somepath`.
