I am currently getting some training for my academics position. One of the things that has been talked about is the following: a rule about of the position of a bibliography at the end of a paper, whether it should be before or after the table of contents I think that with a lot of experience, this might be a false rule, but I thought I'd at least ask if there are any research related rules for this, or it was just a preference. I am not looking for discussion about the pros and cons of either, rather I'd like to know if there is any research related document about this issue that cites relevant research. A: You are correct that there are various conventions regarding the inclusion of references or their placement in mathematics publications. While there is no standard document that codifies how references should appear, there are general guidelines: The American Mathematical Society (AMS) Manual for Publications, Section 9.1.3, has a few rules regarding references that you may want to look at: One of them is: 9.1.3.3 References: Do not omit references to works that are widely cited or ones that are particularly useful. As well as: References (usually denoted by numbers) should be placed either at the end of the paper or at the end of the volume, even when they are included in the Table of Contents. For those interested in seeing more specific guidelines: The LMS Journal Style Manual, section 7.11, says: Referenced material is normally placed at the end of the work.... Perhaps it is worth considering a separate section at the end of the work; see [10] below, or [15] for a different approach. Section 7.12: [...] A list of references, printed at the end of the paper is called an end bibliography. The Mathematical Gazette (I think) suggests one approach to footnote-like bibliographic information (page 6): In general, people like to cite many people or papers, and so a list
