The tool can be used with all Office 2003 and later versions, and allows users to enjoy a tabbed interface in Word, Excel and PowerPoint. Something that Microsoft's application does not offer by default. Easily manage multiple documents Courtesy of the tabbed interface that this add-in provides, Microsoft Office users can open multiple documents simultaneously in the same application window, thus enjoying improved management capabilities. The tabbed interface provides users with the possibility to switch between documents seamlessly, while also allowing them to save and close multiple documents instantly, with a single mouse click, courtesy of the "Save All" and "Close All" options in the context menu.

Further document management features are available courtesy of support for file groups. Users can add their documents to groups, and can open, save and close all files in a group at once. Customizable tabs The tool comes with support for re-ordering tabs, so as to deliver increased efficiency. Switching between tabs can be done either by clicking on them or with the help of hotkeys. Users can change the colors of their tabs and are provided with a series of tab styles to choose from. Moreover, they can customize their experience by changing the name and font of each tab to better suit their needs. Easily rename files The add-in makes the renaming of files a simple operation, as it eliminates the need to use the Save As option. The rename function is conveniently displayed in the context menu for quick access. The add-in can display the full name of a document, something that Office might not do when the name is too long. However, users can also set tabs to feature a given length or to automatically adapt to the length of the document's name. At least one photograph of the Fair was presented as a Northern image at that time, even though the photograph was taken in the Western Slope. In the 1960’s, the Slone Hotel was razed in favor of the Flatiron and Union Pacific buildings, the latter of which forms the corner of the Fairground. Photographers may have noticed the railroad traffic pass directly in front of the Slone, but they wouldn’t have seen its rival, the brand-new Union Pacific building. One could call this photograph an example of a photograph of the pre-reconstruction St. Thomas, since the railroad freight trains no longer traverse the grounds. However, the photograph also carries a subtle suggestion that it was taken during the Fair’s rebirth. The Indianola and Emery Narrow Gauge Railroad is labeled “Southern” on the photograph’s label. It is likely that the photographer did not realize the significance of the label, and identified it as a Southern image. The fact that no other railroads are present on this Fairground tells us that the photograph was taken in the Western Slope in the 09e8f5149f

He's an agnostic, like me. His story is a bit out of the ordinary, though. If we look at the history of science, we'll find many stories like his. My father's friend, Howard Rosenberg, was a real "intellectual" in the 1950s and 60s. He was a teacher in the Greenwich Village of the 1960s and then he went to work for the U.N. He was an expert on Persian culture and Middle Eastern problems, including conflict with Israel. When the U.N. sent him to occupied Jerusalem as part of a peace-keeping force, he did a little spying for the U.N. of which Israel was a member. Somehow he was caught by the Israelis. When he showed up to face his arrest, the Israelis told him that they had not even known he was there. The war between Israel and its neighbors was far from over when Rosenberg was caught, but the U.N. supported Israel because they needed its cooperation. When Nixon was in office, he held up money to the U.N. while the Israeli ambassador was in Washington to try and stop the U.N. from supporting the Israeli government. Nixon was a bigot, but he was not a stupid man. He knew that if the U.N. held back on its money, America would have to pay the U.N. anyway. So Nixon gave money to the

More advanced data capture tools are expected to elevate consumer health tracking to a new level. That could also shake up the health care system, with hospitals and clinics selling more services that are tied to analytics. Health care is ripe for more data capture, said Robert Restuccia, CEO of health data firm Cluftera, which looks at the state of consumer health tracking tools in November. "We have really good analytic tools on mobile devices and on desktop, but we are going to have a year where we start to take this to the next level," Restuccia said. The Digital Health 2011 Report, released this week by Cluftera and market research firm Forrester Research, found seven of the top 10 health apps and medical device apps use some form of analytics or other technology. Cluftera also found that patients and consumers with health-related apps are more than twice as likely to report their app's tracking performance metrics, such as step count. And 57 percent of these patients and consumers use the app across multiple devices, including smartphones, e-readers, tablets, and game consoles. In addition, mobile health is proliferating, with smartphone users more than twice as likely as other users to track their own health with an app. More than 20 percent of smartphone users report using an app that captures data from their device, Cluftera found, including information on steps, nutrition, weight, sleep, and other metrics. Cluftera also found that
