Admire, too, the thoughtfulness of the letter writers who advised Perry and Lowder that they could not use the fetuses at the clinic unless they were to display them in such a way to reveal the distinctly human form of the unborn. The entire point of the Hippocratic Oath that doctors were advised to swear to uphold in more than 500 years is that, like Perry and Lowder, the modern doctor is sworn not only to save the life of the patient but also the soul from the patient. In the Houston abortion clinic that Perry and Lowder run, an ultrasound machine and a baby's heart rate are measured and recorded by a technician, and then two physicians review the findings to make sure they are "healthy." The procedure is followed by a doctor who injects a chemical agent into the uterus to stop the life of the baby and then another doctor who attaches the baby's feet to the baby's tiny hands and neck to determine how long he would have lived outside the womb. In total, the fetal body parts weigh about four ounces. The abortion doctors say in their letter that they are "committed" to practicing medicine with "compassion" for the fetuses who arrive at their doors. But that is not so. The fetuses are delivered to the abortion doctors for a maiming or killing, and the doctors are paid for their work. As if to confirm this, Perry and Lowder also set up a van for "disposable" newborns. Even in Texas, where 76 percent of the population has chosen to ban abortions after 20 weeks of pregnancy, a woman can choose to have an abortion up to 26 weeks after conception and a doctor can sell her the "health" of the fetus as long as he can refer to an unsaved fetus' heart rate, which he can learn by placing his stethoscope on a special magnifying glass. The practice of abortion is rooted in the proposition that killing a fetus is no different than killing a human being. It's just a fetus with a different level of awareness. In a letter she sent to Perry, Lowder, and the doctors at the clinic where she had an abortion
