The present invention relates to a method for encapsulating high precision electrical components using a functional polymer. Recently, the development of electrical device technology has made it possible to produce a high-level and high-density semiconductor device, electronic appliances having large capacity, the size of which has decreased drastically, and high precision electrical equipment, the precision of which is very high. The demand for encapsulating materials used in these devices and equipment has increased to meet these needs. A general encapsulating method for a semiconductor device or the like is characterized in that a molded product obtained by molding a flux-containing epoxy resin composition by using a mold is surface-treated with an acid or alkali solution containing a hydrofluoric acid (HF) or ammonium fluoride (NH₄F) in order to improve the adhesiveness between a surface of the molded product and a solder material. The conventional methods for surface treatment have involved problems of productivity due to the use of a surface treating agent and a complicated surface treatment process, and of adhesiveness between the surface of the molded product and the solder material. A method for surface treatment has also been developed which uses a functional polymer having an epoxy group or carboxyl group in the molecule. For example, a composition for encapsulation which has been improved in terms of adhesiveness between a surface of the molded product and a solder material has been disclosed, which contains a carboxyl group-containing epoxy resin and a metal salt, as disclosed in Japanese Patent Publication No. 4-125145. It has also been suggested that a carboxyl group-containing epoxy resin and a metal salt can be used together with an ethylene-vinyl acetate copolymer that is excellent in terms of the ability to release a gas, as disclosed in Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 4-378428. In these methods, metal salts of an organic acid, a volatile acid, or the like are used, and the composition for encapsulation is generally dissolved in a solvent, and then molded using a mold. This method allows simple and easy operation, although it involves the drawbacks of productivity due to the use of a solvent, a complicated process, and the use of a surface treating agent. Further, these methods require a high temperature in order to solubilize the composition for encapsulation in a solvent and perform molding and drying. However, there is a fear of the occurrence of cracking or the like due to the use of a mold. 1cb139a0ed
