Fox News Environmentalists are sounding the alarm, and, after months of anticipation, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has finally approved a generic version of the anti-seizure drug Zolpidem, used for many years to treat insomnia. The new drug comes with a few new wrinkles, most notably a generic name that sounds a lot like the drug's original name, Ambien. The decision was made after a lawsuit was filed in 2014 by the generic manufacturer and the drug's distributor, calling for a change in the name of the generic drug, which is made by Genpharm. "I'm sorry about the name change, but if it saves one person from an in-sleep driving accident, that's really worth it," the head of Genpharm, Dr. Michael Linteris, told USA Today. Before this change, there were several similar generic versions available in the U.S. All of them were in the market as "Ambien" prior to the FDA's decision on Wednesday. "We are very sorry to hear that there are a lot of people who are upset with the name, but Genpharm is committed to this new drug," said a spokesperson for Genpharm in an 77a5ca646e

What's New In VRCP ARSKill?

VRCP ARSKill is a tool that can help you protect your computer against malicious autorun scripts. It can terminate autorun processes, delete all files associated with the autorun process, stop the autorun function on all drives, turn off the autorun service or you can even create a hidden folder. All these functions can be performed through the single main window of this software application. The application is lightweight, thus making it a perfect tool for home users. To better understand how this application works, I have listed all of its options below. Note that I have chosen one of the functions to illustrate its feature and the remaining options are disabled. Therefore, some functions might not appear as options and might not work as intended. However, the product team should be able to update this application and include all features available. In any case, I hope that my review of VRCP ARSKill has helped you make an informed decision on whether to get this tool.
