Dream budget SALT LAKE CITY – With the world watching, Utah Gov. Gary Herbert and his newly hired Democratic lieutenant governor announced Wednesday a complete overhaul of how Utah spends money in the next budget year, placing an emphasis on the need for savings as the state grapples with a $638 million budget deficit. “The tax burden of Utahns has been heavy, and we want to level that burden,” Herbert said as he announced his budget priorities that he said were the result of years of work. Herbert is seeking a 2.3 percent, or $1.6 billion, increase in state spending that would result in the state’s structural deficit next budget year shrinking by $185 million. That would bring the structural deficit down to $438 million, according to the Office of the State Controller’s 2018 budget projections. About $80 million of that reduction would come from increases in spending on some welfare programs as the state tightens eligibility requirements for public assistance programs. The state budget stands at $638 million with just $45 million in savings from this past budget year, part of which will be invested in the rainy day fund. Facing a backlog of bills and a $3 billion unfunded teacher pension liability, the state currently is borrowing money from the state’s rainy day fund to stay in business.

The first and the most difficult part of the webmastering is web research. On the internet there are millions of results on the search engines. Last year alone Google alone found over 20 billion web pages. And even with all the new algorithms Google have put into place it's still not possible to catch up with the amount of websites the internet holds. The first step in searching for a website is to find the search engine that will be used. This should be chosen carefully as different search engines have different search capabilities. The most popular are the Google search engine and the Yahoo search engine. The Google search engine and the Yahoo search engine follow a different set of rules and they do not use each other's search. Therefore it is always a good idea to try both of the search engines. Google is more or less popular with the business community, and Yahoo is more or less popular with the college student community. Let's assume that you want to search for a website called "www.cheapcoffeedelivery.com" If you want to search for this website on the Google search engine, you will enter www.cheapcoffeedelivery.com and then the word "site:www.cheapcoffeedelivery.com" as a keyword. If you want to search for this website on the Yahoo search engine, you will enter www.cheapcoffeedelivery.com and then the word "Cheapcoffeedelivery" as a keyword.
