We want to help, offer support, and give what we can to ease the situation. This is how we approach social interactions with people in our lives. I have a hunch that kindness is more than ever a crucial part of a healthy, vibrant life: I've been thinking about kindness a lot lately – a big focus of mine. Kindness, however, is not an easy quality to foster. A startling amount of time and energy goes into just trying to be kind. Put yourself in someone else's shoes – try it, it's easy. But, no matter how good you are at it, we're never going to show kindness to every person on the street, or to every person we deal with at work. That's just not realistic. Or is it
