Imaging pediatric neuro-oncology: review of neurologic and pediatric radiology applications. The foundation of modern neuro-oncology, and of pediatric neuro-oncology in particular, rests on the pivotal contribution of imaging to diagnosis, treatment and outcome of pediatric brain tumors. This review is aimed to provide a general overview of typical imaging features in common pediatric brain tumors, as well as to update readers on the present status of new diagnostic techniques and treatment strategies. New developments in imaging techniques are discussed separately from established ones. Abnormalities in development, cognitive and behavioral functions are also highlighted in this review. Neuro-oncology is a rapidly evolving discipline with high added-value to modern pediatric care. It can only be complete if imaging is used in a comprehensive and interactive manner with a multidisciplinary team of pediatric medical and pediatric oncology specialists. A multidisciplinary approach requires a high level of and frequent exchange of knowledge, and benefits from fruitful collaborations between pediatric and adult neuro-oncologists and neuro-radiologists. Keeping up with current technical and therapeutic developments requires careful and critical evaluation of published, peer-reviewed articles, as well as practical experience, and is best gained by an immersion and longitudinal exposure to both research and clinical neuro-oncology practice.Q: First Class Package in Java - Closest Class I have 2 classes, class1 and class2. Class2 extends class1. Class1 can have any number of class2s (remember class1 has a set of class2s). When I write code, I may refer to one class2 explicitly or by using class1 reference. The number of class2s is large, say 20 (not a limited number or say 100) and the code can be a little messy to see where a class2 is used. So, I'm thinking of a way to have a virtual class called class3, which is closer to class1 than class2 (possibly an abstract class), as it would be the first class to be used in a statement. So for example if class2 is used, I can do something like: class3.doSomething() So, there is a set of class3s, which are different than the class3s of class1, and they can be used as needed. Is there a best way to do this? A: Not sure if i am understanding the question but in my example, ClassA and Class

Q: How do I structure my model to duplicate content? I have an application which allows a user to create something like a "Film" or "Hobby". A Film has an Owner and a Director, a Hobby has an Owner and a Hobbyist. The model looks like: public class Blog { public long BlogId {get; set;} public string BlogName {get; set;} public long OwnerId {get; set;} public long DirectorId {get; set;} public virtual Owner Owner {get; set;} public virtual Director Director {get; set;} } The model Owner and Director are pretty simple, like this: public class Owner { public long OwnerId {get; set;} public string FirstName {get; set;} public string LastName {get; set;} public virtual IList Blogs {get; set;} } public class Director { public long DirectorId {get; set;} public string FirstName {get; set;} public string LastName {get; set;} public virtual IList Blogs {get; set;} } The model Blog isn't done yet, but we'll keep the thing simple for now. Now, here's the question, How do I duplicate the Blogs and make sure they are associated with the owner? A: Thanks to Marc Gravell's answer, I came up with a model that does the job I want: public class Blog { public long BlogId {get; set;} public string BlogName {get; set;} public long OwnerId {get; set;} public long DirectorId {get; set;} public virtual Owner Owner {get; set;} public virtual Director Director {get; set;} public virtual IList BlogOwners {get; set;} public virtual IList BlogDirectors {get; set;} } As you can see, the Owner and the Director can have multiple blogs, each one has a reference to the Owner or the Director, the Blog owner and the Blog director. , and track her whereabouts.
