•Simple to setup, even for beginners •Intuitive and easy-to-use •Helps users to create and configure new macros •Automatically starts and stops automation •Ensures consistent results for automated clicks •Allows users to set up click speed •Makes use of mouse coordinates to locate clickable areas •Designed to work with any touch-screen operating system •Includes a user-friendly and well-thought-out user guide •Supports the popular mouse-click-clack sound It's always good to have a backup, even if it's an old one. iBackup allows you to do just that, on demand, with just a few simple and straightforward clicks, and the software will do its best to backup all of the content in your device to a file on your desktop. Partitioning your device by using the included iBackup Manager can be a good idea, especially if you have different content stored in different folders or partitions. If you do, iBackup allows you to partition and restore the partitions for later use. First things first: If you do not have any content to backup, it's probably best to create a new folder or file on your desktop, so that you can use the software as simply as possible. If you do have content, however, iBackup should be used instead of the built-in backup functions. iBackup allows you to create backups automatically, and even offers a few options for the user, such as the possibility of re-setting your account password when you create a backup. iBackup operates in the background, and only checks your phone every few days, so be sure to run it regularly, and use it when you think you might have an issue. Finally, when you have a backup created, you can check the location of the backup by using the "See File" option. iBackup allows you to backup the following: •SD card •SIM card •Internal memory •External SD card •NAND •Cameras •USB connection •WiFi network •Bluetooth connection •GPS connection •Sound •Bluetooth music •Camera roll •Documents •Data on the external SD card Seagate Backup Plus is one of the largest capacity hard drives available today. Seagate is always striving to make the user experience better with the

Big Data Helps Stop Sex Crimes Sydney man Matthew Short entered a plea of guilty last Friday to five sex charges including two counts of sexual intercourse with a child, one count of sexual intercourse with a person of a particular age or sex, and one count of attempted sexual intercourse with a person of a particular age or sex. The charges are the result of a lengthy investigation led by New South Wales police over an extensive time period. Sydney Police Detective Superintendent Terry Hughes said the investigation showed that Short committed more than 20 sexual crimes against children over a 10 year period, including the sexual abuse of a young girl in the family home. Short's case was being dealt with in the Children's Court. He was to undergo a series of mental health assessments before a sentencing hearing was held. If convicted on all charges Short faces a maximum sentence of 43 years in jail. The defence's principal argument in the case was that Short was not guilty by reason of diminished responsibility, an argument that failed. A spokesman for the Attorney-General's Department said the Sentencing Council had "submitted evidence to the Court on the impact of the defendant's offending on the victim and the community". "This evidence, considered by the Court, had a significant impact on the sentence imposed," he said. Short faced a similar charge in 1996 over the alleged abuse of two other young girls. Description: Convicted sex offender keeps pets Richard John Gaynes, 41, was yesterday sentenced to two years' jail and six months' home detention after he pleaded guilty to a string of sex crimes including the attempted rape and rape of two girls aged seven and eight. The offending began when the alleged offences occurred in the mid 1980s. As a child, the first victim was a babysitter at her home at Campsie. She was abused at the same time as her brother. The second girl was a neighbour of his. She was abused on three occasions at his house. The second girl was also abused on one occasion in Sydney. Gaynes, of Sattler Street, Darlington, was initially placed on a one-year good behaviour bond after pleading guilty to four charges of rape and four charges of indecent assault. He was in the Sydney Children's Court this morning. Sydney paediatrician Dr Sandra Sheppard told the court she had treated the second victim at Royal Prince Alfred Hospital, after the victim's mother became concerned about her daughter's vaginal bleeding. At the time, the girl told Dr Sheppard she was at her boyfriend's house with the defendant. She said that they went upstairs to her bedroom where he "tried to have sex with her". "She told me that she did not want to have sex with him," Dr Sheppard said. The victim was referred to the NSW Children's Court in Sydney. Description: Man to face more sex charges A MADDERLEY man
