To present the 2009 Alcohol, Smoking, and Substance Involvement Screening Test (ASSIST) among college students in terms of (1) the distribution and characteristics of scores on the three domains, and (2) the prevalence of ASSIST scores indicating high-risk drinking and alcohol dependence. Responses to the ASSIST among a sample of 1,947 students from 116 United States colleges and universities were obtained via the RAQA. The most frequent scores indicating high-risk drinking were found in the Alcohol Use and Low Alcohol Use domains. ASSIST scores indicating high-risk drinking were most frequent among men, Caucasians, students enrolled in a general education program, and students at public institutions. ASSIST scores indicating high-risk drinking were least frequent among students from non-Christian denominations and students attending both a prestigious and a non-prestige university. ASSIST scores indicating high-risk drinking were less frequent among students from private institutions, Asian students, and students from low-income families. One in seven respondents had at least one ASSIST score indicating either high-risk drinking or alcohol dependence. There is substantial variation in the distribution and frequency of scores on the ASSIST, indicating that the instrument continues to be of value for use as a screening instrument
