Alibaba The Wall Street Journal reports that regulators from more than 60 countries have launched a new initiative to fight online counterfeiting, joining forces in a coordinated effort at the World Customs Organization. Authorities from China, Japan, France, Germany, Brazil, South Korea and the U.S. have teamed up to fight counterfeit goods, including traffic in high-tech products that are of little or no use to consumers. "Older technologies are becoming less used, and the Internet is providing greater access to low-cost counterfeit goods," a senior French customs official told WSJ. "Our vigilance has greatly increased with the new technologies." In 2013, 63 countries reported $22.2 billion of loss due to counterfeiting and piracy, a drop from the previous year, according to a report from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. In the U.S., $1.4 billion in sales are lost each year, according to the Consumer Goods Safety Commission. The WSJ adds that regulators also are concerned that fake goods now pose a bigger threat to national security and that the antiquated international standards governing the trade and legal parameters for dealing with counterfeits often are inadequate. They also cite the St. Louis Federal Reserve's CFT-TIP report, which was created in 2010, as a tool to better quantify such loss.
