XPFElement – This is a base class of the menu items. Use the protected method called RefreshItems to refresh the content of the menu.

LoadContent() - This is called when the code behind of the Page or Window loads to display all the Content that it contains. All the AccordionMenuItem controls, when they show or hide, will call the IsOpen method on their parent controls. The primary aim of AccordionMenuItem is to hold the menu items that you create in your code. The AccordionMenuItem control will use a set of the CoerceValueCallbacks to help call the IsOpen method on each of its child items. Only the Open event of the parent that is at the top of the open hierarchy will receive the mouse cursor. You can also set the IsOpen property to true to manually control the opening or closing of the menu. This means that you can close the whole menu by touching the header that is at the top of the menu hierarchy. Paste the Menu code from C#, and run the program. You will see that the menu items are displaying. You can change the height of the menu by creating a line-height property in the section of the XAML code. Also, you can change the size of the font by creating a TextBlock and setting the height. You can also programmatically manage the close by dragging on the items that you wish to hide. You can also put menus together to form a tree structure by using the AccordionMenu items. For Example, create a menu item with an image and some text. Add the second menu item that has an image and some text, and so on. Create a hierarchy of menus. This will cause the menu item to collapse to its content. Set the IsOpen property of the menu item to True to open the whole menu. Now, you can create your own.cs file. Add the following code in the MainWindow.xaml.cs file Now you are ready to test the AccordionMenu control. Add the AccordionMenu control as an element to your page.

That's how I got my name. I've been described as a "curious tool" or as a "kitchen sink." And I guess that's how I turned out. But what I am not is a C# "striver." Nor am I a super hero. And I like to share. I love to post things that I've developed or found useful. I know there are many pre-existing posts on things I've had to learn. And I hope that my contributions will make things easier for people who might need them. And on top of that, I get to meet some interesting people. I've been at this WPF for a few months, and loving it. So I hope you will find something of use to you. But there is one thing that has been bothering me: I've been trying to get the Accordion Menu to work. So far the only example I can find is a 2003 VB.NET example here. I've been able to follow the example, but at this point I just can't get it to work in my WPF app. I've looked for examples of how to use the API, but just can't find anything. I guess that's how it is when you are the first one. But I would really appreciate it if anyone has some samples that they could share.
