The 49-year-old man from Port Elizabeth was in France to compete in the Championship of South Africa airshow, which is being held on this week's the final day of the event. But he disappeared from the sky two years ago and only returned home in the last few months. Just after 1pm on Saturday, the man reported his glider had gone missing, and emergency services launched an international search. The man's twin engine Widgeon aircraft took off at 10am and never returned. Shortly after 1pm, he informed rescuers he had crashed into a tree on a public road in the town of Yenga, on the south coast of France. The man was in the hospital with serious injuries, with reports in the local media that he was in a serious condition. "The pilot was able to report his disappearance on his emergency locator beacon," said an official at French air rescue service (SPRAAF). "An international search and rescue operation was launched, but the plane was found crashed in an isolated location about 40km north-east of the base of the airport of Guadeloupe," an officer told AFP. "The survivor was transferred to the hospital in La Seyne-sur-Mer for injuries."The present invention is directed generally to a device for introducing synthetic seeds into the earth. More particularly, the invention is directed to a multi-piece seed-filling unit that can be used to introduce seeds into the ground in a controlled manner and that is able to be retrieved from the ground after the seeds have been planted. The benefits of using synthetic or controlled release seeds are well known. Conventional controlled release seeds are typically contained in a cartridge that contains a synthetic seed that must be introduced into the ground to be released after the seed germinates. Once in the ground, the synthetic seed becomes a source of fertilizer for the plants that emerge from the soil. This type of controlled release system has advantages over conventional seeds because the release
