While the US continues to burn coal and significantly increase its demand for oil and natural gas, the European Union is beginning to phase out the use of burning coal to produce energy. The EU's strict regulation of emissions of nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide, and the mercury in coal will accelerate a shift toward natural gas, wind, solar, and nuclear power in Europe, according to Daniel Yergin, the Pulitzer-winning author of The Prize: The Epic Quest for Oil, Money and Power. "In Europe, coal is being rejected wholesale – mainly because of the regulation," Yergin said. "The coal phase-out was introduced in order to deal with global climate change but that hasn't changed the emissions of gases that are killing people in Europe – that is having a massive impact." The reason the EU is phasing out coal is because of a law passed in 2012 requiring members of the bloc to reduce emissions of so-called air pollutants. The long-term aim of the "Copenhagen" treaty on global climate change, which was signed by nearly 200 countries in December 2009 and took effect in 2012, was to cut global carbon dioxide emissions by 80 to 95 per cent by mid-century. The treaty requires the EU to cut emissions of six major greenhouse gases, carbon dioxide, methane, nitrous oxide, hydrofluorocarbons, sulphur hexafluoride and perfluorocarbons, in a way that is transparent and clear to all stakeholders. As a result of the deal, greenhouse gas emissions have dropped in European Union nations as well as in Russia, where a law was passed in 2010 requiring the coal power industry to reduce the emission of so-called air pollutants by 2 per

Trending Blogs This is all very cool, and it looks great, but it's ... hey that makes a lot of sense. It's ... Alright then. The whole thing reminds of a couple of things in Prey 1 and 2, the creepy AI that hangs on to people and won't ... it sounds pretty good. And like the games are ... but it didn't ... it's not really up for debate. It is a pretty good fit. If we're ignoring the few bug reports and the price in hand, it's pretty good. But most of all, your soul is in your hands. There are more than a few options available with as many interesting aspects to check out. Another app from the same developers just arrived: BragSight, the app lets you boast your gaming skills to the world. This next installment expands a bit, although you can still play around in select areas and on select maps. This is good news for players and allows the game to remain as free-to-play as it can be. Facebook Connects Safari Webmail with Usenet Facebook now lets you have a Facebook user ID and play music or watch videos from Usenet Groups. This is part of a new Universal Search box that will appear for new Firefox users, although it'll be available immediately for existing users that have not yet switched over. "It's a matter of protecting what we have built," said Chris Hastings, Facebook vice president of advertising. "The purpose is to keep out spam and other bad things, and to give people better access." You'll need a Facebook account if you want to use Facebook Connect, but if you're new to Facebook, that's all you need to know for now. Once you have a Facebook account, you can sign in. Then, if you have Facebook friends that are also using Web mail with a Usenet provider, they can add you. Different Rules for Groups If you're using a Usenet provider that tracks group activity, you might be able f30f4ccada
