Insulin therapy of nonglycemic abnormalities in patients with diabetes mellitus. An Italian multicenter cooperative study. Results of a 1-year observation. Based on data obtained from the records of the four Italian Centres involved in the 'Associazione Italiana di Diabetologia' under a clinical protocol, this report describes the effects of insulin on blood glucose, lipids, and blood pressure (BP) of 3,277 patients suffering from Non-Insulin Dependent Diabetes Mellitus (NIDDM) during the year 1983. The patients were classified as having moderately severe (60% of the cases) or severe (40%) glycemic control. A small group (less than 5%) was not considered for analysis. The amount of insulin used was related to the type of therapy offered to the patients: multiple daily injections (MDI) and continuous subcutaneous insulin infusion (CSII) were used in patients with moderately severe and severe, respectively, blood glucose control. The percentage of patients having blood pressure values above normal, and the percentage of patients who reached the target range or an improved BP control, were similar in the two groups. Conversely, a f30f4ceada
