I analyzed [3H]spiroperidol-binding sites in the piriform cortex of rats. Pharmacological analysis of [3H]spiroperidol-binding sites indicated that there are D1 and D2 subtypes, but not D4 receptors. Additionally, analysis of regional pharmacology of [3H]spiroperidol-binding sites revealed that the D1 receptors are more numerous in different subregions of the piriform cortex. Donald Trump has never accepted a donation from a convicted felon. But if he wins the presidency, the candidate has vowed that he'll support Hillary Clinton's plan to make donations to her campaign from companies that employ felons illegal. "If I'm elected, I'll repeal it," Trump told CNN's Anderson Cooper in a February interview. The Republican nominee also said he will oppose legislation or executive order making the donations legal. "Hillary Clinton is not going to go to jail," Trump said. "She's never gone to jail in her life. Why should she go to jail?" The Clinton campaign claims that it has "no plans to take any donations from people with records." But on Monday, former New York Gov. George Pataki – an establishment Republican who's supporting Trump's candidacy – took up the issue for a second time, pointing out that, even though Clinton has no plans to prosecute donors, the Justice Department has the option. "This is unprecedented," said Pataki, who served as co-chair of Trump's campaign in 2000. "It is clear that no prosecution can take place because this administration is going to be the one in charge of prosecuting the case. The Justice Department has the legal power, but they are not, under existing law, required to prosecute her donors." Pataki and Trump have a history of criticizing each other over past scandals. Before the latest controversy involving the Clinton Foundation's ties
