Here's the story behind it. ------------------------------------------------------ The man was found in a strange land that was slowly slipping from civilization into the bowels of Oblivion. He spoke softly to the land, desperate to be heard before it was too late. The land heard his sad pleadings, and it bent down in submission. The Atlas of Dreamland was born. Illyriad II: The Atlas of Dreamland is an expansion for the mod Ilyriad, which is included with the The Atlas of Dreamland. The current version (1.0) of the mod is ver. 1.2.6. ------------------------------------------------------ Changes Version 1.0.4 - Collapsing the mod to a subfolder in the main modfolder, due to the mod being so large (over 80kb) - Added tile linking to avoid large files from appearing in the patcher - Added a small warning to the phi-block at the end of the final chapter for all those who don't have it already Version 1.0.5 - Collapsing more parts of the mod into sub-folders, to lessen the filesize - Moved the armor linked to the LVL 2 throne to the new armor file - Corrected some of the link-location's Version 1.1 - Recompiled the Ai folders to use the new version - Recompiled the skin mod files (redone the mesh files) - Recompiled the lighting folder Version 1.2 - Removed the unused parts of the mod (all the empty folders) - Added some missing link-directories Version 1.3 - Removed some unused scripts - Added the second armor

Heathcliff is a lightweight utility developed to help you to monitor your PC. Heathcliff will give you detailed statistics about your system that you would not get otherwise. Some of the tools that Heathcliff provides are the same as those in Performance Monitor (System Monitor) of Windows, but Heathcliff will display more information and you don't have to click through all the dialogs of System Monitor. You can also view the CPU usage, number of open files, number of bytes read/written, free disk space and much more. Heathcliff is an handy tool to troubleshoot several Windows problems such as low memory, freezing up, slow system and so on. Heathcliff Description: This free utility helps you monitor your system usage in a unique way. The first thing that you will notice is the coloured form on the top of the application. This is the main interface of the tool. You will have icons on the form to start monitoring certain aspects of the system. There are also a few tools to get detailed statistics about your system such as CPU usage, number of open files, number of bytes read/written, free disk space and many more. The colours of the form's icons are used to indicate the current status of the monitored system aspect. For example, when the system is idle, the form will have a green light on the circle; when there is an active process, the system icon will have a light red colour on the circle. When the system goes into a locking state, the form will have a red light on the system icon. The more extreme states such as blues and oranges are 09e8f5149f

If you want to know how much time you have invested in playing games, watching movies or surfing, you can just set your clock according to your time spending. It's hard to measure the time when you are doing many things, such as: surfing, watching movies, games, etc. Of course, you can use other time or computer usage monitoring tools. On the other hand, the majority of people are not able to get an accurate time measurement while doing other jobs. The software allows you to set 2 main and 3 secondary alarms. That means that you can limit the time of using the computer for your specific work. You can set the alarm if you spend no more than certain period of time or the computer is shut down during the work.
