A: An attempt to answer this question will be incomplete, therefore, going with the assumption that the OP is asking about the memory foot print on the server side and how the OP feels to increase it. Let us assume that the OP is well versed with MySQL, however, the same case would go for other database management systems such as PostgreSQL, MSSql, etc. If the OP wants to increase memory footprint, the recommended way to do so is to use the parameter tuning while setting up the MySQL server. However, by increasing the max_heap_table_size to a larger value, it will consume more memory on the server. Another approach to increase the memory footprint, is to increase the max_allowed_packet. The maximum value of this parameter depends on the server vendor, but if the max value is too large, then we need to create the user with a higher privileges that can increase the default limit. I hope this answers the question. A Life Well Lived Albert Einstein once said, "If you're bored with your life, you're probably living the right one." Unfortunately, not everyone agrees with Einstein. Boredom can be an uncomfortable feeling, especially when it hits at just the wrong time. But, it is important to understand boredom◆
