Q: Flutter: onTap listener, how to avoid calling setState before it is completed? I have a button which onTap I show something from Firebase database. It works. But I find that it is called many times, i.e. multiple times when I tap the button. However I want to perform a specific action only once. So, how can I prevent setState from being called multiple times? I tried to use the Futures library but failed. Finally, I managed to handle it by setting the default property of FirebaseDatabase 'onDisconnect' to a function: `bool isFirebaseConnected = true; DatabaseReference _db = FirebaseDatabase.instance.reference(); ... void _onDisconnect() async { if (isFirebaseConnected) { await _db.reset().then((value) { if (value!= null) setState(() {}); }); } else setState(() {}); }` By default, it is false. So the button will not perform any action. Then when the user tries to close the app, it will call the function. Then I can perform the action after the 'onDisconnect' function is completed. A: The calling setState multiple times is a normal behaviour. You can invoke the StatefulWidget or StatefulWidget's State class directly instead of using setState(). You can refactor your code like: `bool isFirebaseConnected = true; DatabaseReference _db = FirebaseDatabase.instance.reference(); ... void _onDisconnect() async { if (isFirebaseConnected) { await _db.reset().then((value) { if (value!= null) doSomething() //in case of error check if the function returns or throws //redirect to the previous page... //setState() automatically called after checking for null value //so`

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a phase-change recording layer having a crystalline state and an amorphous state with an excellent recording sensitivity and a recording medium containing the recording layer, which has an optical property suitable for a high-density recording signal. 2. Description of the Prior Art As the phase-change recording medium, a chalcogenide material such as a sulfide material, a selenide material, and a telluride material is used. As the chalcogenide material, first, an alloy of a GeTe-Sb.sub.2 Te.sub.3 system, an InTe-Sb.sub.2 Te.sub.3 system, an InSb-Te system, and the like has been known. Recently, as the recording material, there is being developed a recording medium having a phase-change recording layer obtained by coating a thin film of the chalcogenide material. As the phase-change recording medium is necessary that a new high-density recording can be made, it is essential for the chalcogenide material that an amorphous state and a crystalline state are given enough stability by cooling and heating to have an excellent recording sensitivity. It is very difficult to stably reproduce an amorphous state and a crystalline state, and there is a problem that satisfactory sensitivity cannot be obtained under a predetermined condition. Further, as the resistance of the chalcogenide material is low, there is a problem that the material is heated to a temperature higher than necessary for the recording with a laser beam by the heat generated in the medium and the recording is adversely affected. For example, it is necessary for a phase-change recording medium to provide a characteristic such that the recording sensitivity is not changed before the recording and to have a large difference in reflectivity between an amorphous state and a crystalline state. In order to satisfy these requirements, it is essential that an amorphous state and a crystalline state are stably reproduced. However, because of a problem in the stably reproduction of amorphous and crystalline states in the phase-change recording medium, it is not impossible to obtain a high-density recording of a binary type, and it is difficult to provide a medium having a higher density than the conventional medium. The chalcogenide material requires a high speed recording and an excellent response, and it is required to have a
