There is one element in the above element list that have more than one value: Adm Impr MBL Ener Perp Bsa Infl Can anyone please help me figure this out? Edit1 I figured out a way to do what I need to do with a really dirty solution, but I really don't like the solution because it seems wrong to me. Is there another more elegant solution? A: If I understand correctly, you want to clean up lists like these: [Xml] In VB.Net, you can use a statement like For Each elem As XElement in.Elements("property") Dim tmp as new string() tmp = elem.Attributes("PropertyName").Value elem.Attribute("PropertyName").Value = tmp Next I'm not sure what is the best way to do it in C#, but I do know that the following should work: foreach(XElement elem in doc.Root.Elements("property")) { string tmp = elem.Attributes("PropertyName").Value; elem.Attributes("PropertyName").Value = tmp; } Q: Is there a way to change namespace of an object without changing its class name in java? Let's say, i have a package structure like this MyProject MyProject.java Default.java Default.java has some of my functions. I created one object with the name default in Default.java. I would like to call them in MyProject without changing default class name in Default.java. Is there any way to do it? A: If you want to refer to a class by its

Despite an ongoing investigation, the exact cause or causes of the landslide remain an enigma. "We are continuing to look at all possible causes. One thing we continue to look at is soil eroding on the hillside," said Farmington Chief of Police Jody Thomas. "There are a lot of possible causes." On April 1, the hillside above Trumbull Lake collapsed. It resulted in a 600 foot long landslide that involved some 2 million cubic yards of dirt and rock falling into the lake and reservoir below. There have been many theories and questions about what exactly happened. "We still have an ongoing investigation but we are actively looking at the situation," Thomas said. "There are a number of possible causes. We are looking at the possibility of the hillside collapsing." Thomas said the solid of the cliffside beneath a thin mat of grass has shifted downward. "The soils have eroded into the cliff below the hill, underneath a thin layer of grass," Thomas said. "We are looking at the possibility of soil erosion as a cause for this." Police Chief Jody Thomas addressing a group of Farmington residents at a community meeting held at the Cooper Middle School on April 11. The meeting was called to give residents an update on the investigation and the issue of soil erosion on the hillside. This is an ongoing issue and the city is actively looking into it. - Photo by Trina Gonzales The meeting 3e33713323
