The Virginia State Police will host an Operational Review Meeting in Fairfax, Virginia next Wednesday, September 19 at the Fairfax Station Banquet Hall located at 1871 West Ox Road. The meeting, which will last roughly one hour, will provide a forum for prosecutors and law enforcement to meet and discuss the findings of an inquiry that found certain forms of voter fraud in the state over the past several election cycles. Police officials found "numerous" instances of people "voting by using absentee ballots from their homes when they did not have a residence in Virginia" from 2002 to 2015, reported Politico. Politico further reports that the state's State Police found that 41 percent of the alleged cases occurred in Fairfax County, which includes the city of Fairfax, and that another 20 percent of the cases took place in Prince William County. Prince William County is considered a bellwether district for elections and has a reputation for being conservative. Politico also notes that the Fairfax County voter rolls appear to be "less populated" than "other parts of Virginia" and that "an unusually high number of voters are registered in other states." One-third of the people suspected of voting from their residence and not residing in the state were in the city of Richmond alone. Special Agent-in-Charge Glenn Ivey of the state police's Office of Election Enforcement said that the "alleged actions appear to be related" to party officials and volunteers instead of actual members of the public. "We've spoken with a number of people who have been charged. They're the ones that have been fired," he said. "So far we've prosecuted four individuals. I think that's just the beginning. The investigation is ongoing," he added. The investigation reportedly began in August of 2015 when the Virginia State Police received a tip that residents in the Capital Region were mailing absentee ballots to their homes while not actually residing in the state. One case, in particular, involved an individual "who was legally
