I got home and made something and it turned out to be really good. I did work a bit on my paintings today also. I started up the compost area, which is really fascinating, to think about it, and I have about 9 cats that hang out under my studio that like to watch the birds come in at the window and stretch out in the sun. I was out of sour cream, so I put some mayo in my salad (which is mostly kale now) instead of sour cream, I also added a couple of spices that I had in the cabinet. I made us dinner out of that salad, and I had the rest of my coffee so it was a very nourishing evening. I know, coffee makes me hyper...I'm glad I had something else to do. I had a great day, just as I hoped it would be...no rain, a little wind, some sun and I saw a couple of turtles. Maybe tomorrow I'll take out for a walk. Maybe go get a few more cans and mail off some stuff. I love these parts of Seattle when the wind blows the trees over from the neighbors onto our lawns and the air feels so fresh. It's still beautiful out there. I'm getting ready to go out for a walk with Alice and the kitties at the country house. I'm giving away a copy of my first novel, "The Collected Legends of Dorthy Gray". Two copies are given away daily, starting tomorrow. Every copy has been read, and reviewed and edited, I sent out the last signed copy yesterday. There are now just over 40,000 people reading it. But it's summertime and I'm spending my days lazing in the hammock, lying in the grass, swimming in the lake, tending the garden and I 3e33713323
