The Cardinals placed Josh Outman on the inactive list for the Aug. 12 game vs. Los Angeles, according to a team spokesman. Outman, who is a product of the college program at the University of Texas, will be a special guest coach and on the coaching staff for the game, as ESPN.com and the Arizona Republic have reported. Outman has a one-year contract with the club and will be assigned to a player, mostly in the bullpen, the spokesman said. It's still worth it to see some college kids play for the Cards after so many years. Some great stories about the game of baseball. Here's to more good news over the next week.
Metal allergy: real and perceived problem. The problem of metal allergy is real. Metal allergenicity can cause dermatitis and, therefore, dermatologists are well placed to diagnose and manage those affected. However, in patients who present with vague symptoms of systemic metal toxicity it may be harder to establish whether any atopy is related to the metal or is simply coincidental. The literature indicates that the prevalence of metal allergy is underestimated, particularly in patients without signs of contact sensitivity. The use of the metal challenge test, with its limitations, is likely to help to establish a metal allergy diagnosis.
