The virus responsible for this infection, known as the West Nile Virus, lives in birds. There are no known cases of humans becoming infected by the virus, but bird to human transmission is a potential problem. To date, the World Health Organization and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) have not found West Nile virus in humans. But there are three known types of West Nile Virus infection: Neurological Infection This is the most severe form of the disease and occurs when West Nile virus spreads into the brain. This is a very rare form of West Nile virus infection and normally affects elderly people, those with weak immune systems, and those who are not able to get proper antiviral treatment. Neurological West Nile virus infections have also been reported in children and young adults. Arthritic Infection This type of West Nile virus infection does not involve the brain and may affect muscle or joints. This form of West Nile virus infection is most common in middle-aged adults, especially those with arthritis, in people who work outdoors, and in people who live in summer climates.
