Q: How do I run a Maven project from Terminal (using the External Build) I'm running Ubuntu 15.10, and I would like to run a Maven-based project from Terminal. Normally I would simply go into the project's directory, and use Maven like so: mvn clean install but for this project, it uses an external build, so I don't know where to go. Multi-scale model of structure and dynamics of rat cortical pyramidal cells. Pyramidal cells have more sophisticated response properties and have higher information processing capacity than other neurons. These properties include frequency and voltage gating of membrane potential, specific excitatory postsynaptic currents, and theta oscillation. These cellular properties are attributed to the highly complex dendritic structure and the resulting voltage, calcium, and potassium currents. Here, we propose a multi-scale computational model of the single pyramidal cell of the rat cerebral cortex. We used the dendritic structure of the cells reconstructed from the light micrographs with diameter over 10 μm . The computational model is constructed with a compartmental model that includes various membrane conductances and active dendritic conductances such as high-voltage activated and low-voltage activated sodium and calcium currents. Using this model, we analyzed quantitatively the model responses using various stimulation patterns. Our analysis revealed that the locations of active dendritic conductances coincide with the locations of the voltage, calcium and sodium currents.

Q: QMessageBox not working from a thread in Qt I have a qt application that has a signal-slot connection. The signal is fired from an external thread. class MyClass : public QObject { signals: private slots: void myFunc(); }; I want to use the QMessageBox class in the myFunc function. void MyClass::myFunc() { QMessageBox::information(0, "Some message", "Whatever"); } The problem is that the message box doesn't appear when the function is called. If I call the myFunc function from the MainWindow class,
