Do not use, throw, or discharge any nitro gas, especially when anything liquid is nearby. According to their size, nitro gases can be classified into three sub-categories: Nitro gases are odorous and colorless. It can be easily dissolved in gasoline. And they are easy to explode. When they explode, they may form a mixture of water, carbon dioxide, hydrogen cyanide, and nitrogen dioxide. And they usually release a loud noise. These gases are used as a propellant for munitions. For example: TNT (Trinitrotoluene), TND, RDX, and plastic explosives. They are colorless and odorless. The crystal water is used as a propellant for rockets and warheads. For example: Stick explosives (TNT sticks, stick grenades, or 5.8×28 mm ANFO round), rocket fuel (RP-1), and AP rounds. If you find sticky liquid or white granules on the ground, please turn off the device to prevent explosion. Nitro gases are colorless and odorless. Nitroglycerin, C4, DNT, and TNT are examples of nitro gases. If the device explodes, please turn off the device, cover the suspected area with cloths, and alert the nearby emergency response team. Nitro gases are colorless and odorless. It is difficult to handle them. If you have discovered nitro gases, please refer to instructions or speak to emergency response teams. This gas type is a kind of low explosive. Therefore, it is difficult to handle it. If you find sticky liquid or white granules on the ground, please turn off the device to prevent explosion. Nitro gases are colorless and odorless. They are easy to be handled. If you find sticky liquid or white granules on the ground, please turn off the device to prevent explosion. Nitro gases are colorless and odorless. They can be easily soluble in the water.

What's the actual name of the file extension? Who is S-R-Y? What is the reason I can't save this file on a Windows based machine? A: These files are often created using document creation tools like Microsoft Word. When you right click on the file and select the properties, it will tell you what file extension it is. The GID.rtf file extension is for Rich Text Format files, which include text files with formatting options, such as bold, italic, colors, and fonts. In Microsoft Word, the file extension for a Microsoft Word document is *.doc.
