What's New in the?

Creating an awesome resume is easy. Just fill out the fields. It's that simple. The problem is, designing that resume can be very frustrating, especially when there are so many ways that people want to be represented. Not all resumes are created equal. Some have exactly what you're looking for, some have a good amount of what you want, but others are just boring. Make sure that yours is one of the former. If you're new to resume creation, here are a few tips that will help you get started: #1. Know What You Want To Include Don't try to tell your future boss about your awesome skills in spreadsheet software when really you're a master in Microsoft Excel. Show that you have a love for numbers and you're willing to work long hours to get things done. #2. Be As Specific As Possible While using "data entry" might be one of your favorite parts about your job, don't make it the big selling point on your resume. Instead, put your three or four most favorite projects on the top of the page with a brief description of what you did and why it was a highlight of the project. #3. Have A Professional Appearance Have a professional looking resume with a clean layout and a large font. Font size isn't exactly a factor of your skills, but it does make you more presentable than someone who went and added a big font and a huge smiley face to their resume. #4. Get Personalized Help From Templates If you are stuck, have a human read your resume. Not your boss, but a real person. No automated spam message from the free template creator. I recommend a friend or even a personal website that you pay for or plan on joining as a member. Either way, get it read and approved by a human. #5. Prewrite Your Resume If you're working on this resume for a week or two, you have a much better chance of achieving a high score in blind resumes than the other way around. #6. Put A Summary On Your Resume They're more for your own benefit than the person on the other side, but summaries are a great way to win people's attention and get them interested in your resume. #7. Make Sure It's Timely Make sure that it's not too
