A smartphone is a great device for lots of things, but it's not always meant for college. A lot of students these days are using their smartphones to stay in touch with each other and the world. Since this technology's roots are in the technology of the computer, it's important to be aware of how to use it effectively. First and foremost, know your own policy and guidelines. Your university probably has its own set of rules, both in what smartphones can and cannot be used for, how they can be used, and when and where they can be used. Know them and your options. Know your network and how the network works. What phones can you use? What apps are available? How to download them? (Droid students, you need to know your options. I.E., if you are connecting through a laptop/cable, can you use your phone's browser? Does it have an app store?) Plan ahead. If you're like most students, your schedule is not all that great. If you're getting a smartphone, you may want to plan ahead on how you're going to use it. (For example, your school may have certain times that you're not allowed to use your phone on campus.) If you're going to use your phone for work purposes, you can be sure that you'll need to be careful about staying within the bounds of your company's policies. Do your research. There's a reason why all the best things, like Ustream, YouTube, and Vine, are on a smartphone. It's because there's a lot of great stuff to do with smartphones. But there are also a lot of things that a smartphone is simply not meant for. Before you buy a smartphone, do a lot of research and make sure it's a good fit for you. Communication is the name of the game. It's easy to make a phone call. It's easy to text. It's easy to email. Do you want to do more than just phone? Do you want to be able to email and text your friends? That's what smartphones are for. There are a lot of things that you can do with a smartphone that you can't do with other devices. But there are also a lot of things that a smartphone is simply not meant for. Be aware of the things that your smartphone is meant for. Make sure you know what you're getting and what it's for before you buy. There's no excuse for not knowing this stuff.
