Male C57BL/6J x C3H/HeJ F1 mice were tested for their capacity to metabolize ethanol to acetaldehyde by the inhalation of ethanol vapor over a range of concentrations between 35 and 175 mg/L. Each mouse was exposed to a single concentration of ethanol vapor, and the latency to death and the incidence of death at each exposure level were recorded for 60 min. When exposed to a water control, all mice died within 15 min. However, when exposed to ethanol vapor, a murine strain widely regarded as ethanol-sensitive (C57BL/6J) were partially protected from ethanol toxicity when exposed to 75 or 175 mg/L ethanol vapor, and these animals survived for up to 50 min. The ethanol-tolerant strain (C3H/HeJ) were more sensitive than C57BL/6J mice, in that all mice died after only 30 min of exposure to 175 mg/L ethanol. 91bb86ccfa
