Color to HTML is a handy tool that can grab any color from a page and reveal the associated HTML code. Using Color to HTML is pretty easy, as it presents a classic interface with various icons in the center. A color picker, standard color palette, confirmation box, and popup window are available for each option. However, the limitation is that it can only extract code from a web browser. Features The program works well with a flash drive, but requires .NET Framework for it to function properly. Both RGB and HTML fields can be used to extract the right color or HTML code.

Customizable appearance and layout. Search option is available to pick a color by using any of the supported browsers. The tool is not limited to web browsers, as it can extract HTML codes from other apps as well.

Q: React Native not picking up Styles on one device but does on another I have this simple contact form, made in React Native. The form works just fine on the emulator and on my Xamarin Forms app. The problem is that on my physical phone (Samsung Galaxy S6), it doesn't pick up the background style of background: transparent;. So in this case, the Contact Form component is rendered as a white background. Am I missing something? My code is as follows:

ContactForm.js
import React, { Component } from 'react'; import { Text, View, StyleSheet, Button, TextInput } from 'react-native'; export default class ContactForm extends Component { constructor(props) { super(props); this.state = { isLoading:
```

true, error: null, errorMsg: "", message: null, showSpinner:
  false, }; } render() { if (this.state.errorMsg) { return this.renderError(); } else if (this.state.message) { return this.renderSuccess(); } else if (this.state.isLoading) { return
