The increasing number of identity and data theft attempts, alongside browsing habits monitoring determines more and more users to use proxy servers in order to conceal their real identity and location. Finding a valid proxy to use requires some research, but fortunately there are applications that can help you out in this matter and ZennoProxyChecker is one of them. Find valid proxies As its name suggests, this application is designed to check the availability of multiple proxy servers, allowing you to choose any of the results to anonymize your Internet connection. Practically, the application checks whether the proxies in its list of sources are alive and returns its findings as a report. Creating a source list is done in various ways: you can either add them manually one by one or use the integrated wizard to import them all in one go from online or a local file. Once you start ZennoProxyChecker, it will send requests to the proxy server and if an answer is received, it moves the address to the 'Live Proxies' list. Customize and filter your search For each source you can define the address and choose the type of proxies to verify. In addition to this, it enables you to choose the tests to run (Alive, POST, HTTPS, Speed), define the URL to check, adjust the request timeout, the recheck time interval and assign custom labels to valid servers. ZennoProxyChecker comes with filtering capabilities, allowing you to refine your search by eliminating proxy servers that do not match specific criteria related to the port number, the IP subnet, minimum speed, maximum delay, country, anonymity level and so on.
