Deploying Linux Based Web Application Applications (LAMP Stack) in just 3 steps In this video we will be discussing "how to deploy a LAMP based application easily and quickly using xinetd and webmin". We will be discussing the Linux desktop called PC-BSD. This distribution - as its name suggests is designed for the FreeBSD operating system. It aims to provide a desktop solution that is similar to what the majority of the Linux desktop user-base would not find intimidating, friendly, and easy to use. PC-BSD comes with a GNOME desktop called Desktop/Netbook edition and gives the option to use either of the two desktops, but we will be discussing the GNOME desktop solution. PC-BSD offers the user a Webmin control panel to use while administering the machine. Xinetd - will be used to handle service listening and application loading and unloading. Webmin is a web based control panel for Apache. We have previously developed a method of analysis of the interactions of tumor cells with the extracellular matrix, using a PET technique in a multiwell plate. We evaluated the potential of this approach for the study of cellular interactions in tumor tissues. We compared the uptake of a PET-derived radioligand with that of a conventional radiopharmaceutical (Fluciclovine, F-18), for the purpose of analyzing the cellular interactions of murine tumor cells with extracellular matrix proteins (Matrigel). The uptake of both tracers was assayed in various patterns, using various concentrations of radioligand and matrix proteins, as well as in the presence of a high density of cells, to analyze the interactions. The uptake of both tracers increased proportionally with the increasing concentration of matrix proteins. Uptake of both tracers in the presence of a high density of cells was
