I was reading an article and there were some sentences which I didn't quite understand. I think "worthy" is the word here, but is it basically "worthy" or "not worthy"? If so, can anyone explain why not worthy is used here? A: If I was a betting man, I would say your question is answered here, but in case it's not, in full: "Not worthy of" means that something is not worth any attention, consideration or time. You can use it both ways: I'm so ashamed I am not worthy of your time. [The speaker is not proud of something and thinks it isn't worth your time to hear about it.] "Not worthy of" is usually used with adjectives, as in "That idea is not worthy of consideration." According to TheFreeDictionary.com, it's often used with "for" to say something is not important to someone, but it comes up in lots of other contexts. Here's a blog post on "not worthy of" with related examples. A: It could mean "There is nothing in the object that is even slightly worthy of your time, consideration, or interest
