DESCRIPTION: (Applicant's Abstract) This proposal seeks to develop a novel, realistic, and effective intervention approach for people with acquired brain injury (ABI) and associated cognitive and memory impairment. The proposal is based on a comprehensive model of acquired and often enduring cognitive and memory impairment. Data indicate that the model is associated with impaired cognitive and memory processings. Consistent with the model, the person's cognitive and memory impairment is associated with impaired processing of schema information and the impairment may be compounded when the impairment is associated with a sense of threat. Furthermore, the impairment may be associated with information processing disruption. The model is a direct synthesis of empirical data, effective neuropsychological theory, and an integrated set of metaphors. The model suggests that by directing and delivering focused instructional and training interventions, a person's relatively intact cognitive function can be used to the person's advantage as the intervention modifies the person's schemas to alter person-schema relationships so that person-schema representational associations yield to schema- schema associations. The case studies and the experiments are consistent with the model and demonstrate that the model is associated with inter-subjective understanding and emotional experience in persons with ABI.

Furthermore, the model predicts the effectiveness of the approach in rehabilitation interventions. Thus, the projects are designed to assess the efficacy of the proposed intervention approach. The investigators will develop and refine a novel approach, the Active Interventions Approach, for rehabilitation of individuals with acquired brain injury (ABI). The proposed intervention targets both the cognitive and emotional representations of the brain-injured person, and thus the approach is theoretically grounded in brain-injury theory. The specific aims of the project are to: 1. develop and refine the Active Interventions Approach (AIA) through data collection and analysis; 2. evaluate the AIA, in a cross- 6a5afdab4c
