For pixel images (see Chapter 5), Adobe has a tutorial in the Creative Suite's Help menu. This tutorial can be very enlightening to the idea of a pixel image, but be aware that it differs from a printout, which has higher resolution and is often created to print in a single sheet. Open up Photoshop and drag a new blank file (File | New) onto the blank desktop. In the New Document window, choose File Type and then Photoshop Graphic (see Figure 3-3). Click OK to accept the settings and create the new document. The Resize window appears on the right side of the interface. Use the handles at the bottom to resize the current document so that it's the same size as the new blank document. Figure 3-3: The New Document window. 7. Save the new file by choosing File | Save. When the save dialog box opens, make sure that you save it to a location that's easily accessible, such as the `saved_in_photoshop` folder, and then give it a name such as My Photoshop File. Make sure to save the file as a PNG file and to set it to 8-bit color. Photoshop's default file size is currently 11 megapixels, but you can choose lower resolutions. Can you imagine a world without breaks, borders, or rules? Can you imagine a world of free, anonymous people in a free, open source world? That's what this project is all about. I'd like to launch a hackathon here in Zurich. The idea would be to make a website where people could post and share their homes under an open-source licence. It would be similar to Wikipedia, in that anyone could edit and write, but it would be different in many ways. As I see it, you could "edit" your homes by improving them, by adding your own doodle, or by making them more fun. You could also "further develop your home" by adding information about yourself. You could "feature" other homes. In the same way that Wikipedia has featured articles, you could feature your friends' homes. You could even "host" your own versions of places like Russia or Japan. It could also be like Twitter. Anyone could "follow" a home, and if a home gets good enough they might get featured. The idea of this website is for it to be an open space, for people to be free and for anyone to choose what they want to edit and what they want to add to homes. However it is planned, the site will also have a chat and a bulletin board. We're only 5 days into the hacking period of the hackathon, and the idea is still in the early stages. But what do you think? Can you imagine a world where one could live in an open source project? Or do you think it's just too good to be true?Q: Python Code - 'built-in' functions such as re and sorted, though not subs, not just module? I wonder if 'built-in' python code exists, even though not a sub, a function or something, what's the point of having 'built-in' code, and what it serves? Take sorted, for example, I understand how the functions like re and sorted are structured, how they do what they do, but if they aren't even in python's standard lib, (the standard lib is fully transitive, so if sorted is there, re is there), why do they exist? The best way I could think of to explain it is that there is a purpose for '
