Removal of Rhodamine B using n-Hexyl C18 sulfonate by adsorption and photocatalytic oxidation. N-Hexyl C18 sulfonate (NHS18), a novel aromatic sulfonate, was synthesized from the esterification of n-hexyl p-toluenesulfonate and C18 carboxylic acid in one step, and was used as an efficient adsorbent for removal of rhodamine B (RhB) from water and wastewater. The adsorption kinetics of RhB on NHS18 was fitted well by the pseudo-first-order model. The adsorption equilibrium data were fitted well by Langmuir and Freundlich isotherm models. The adsorption process was found to be spontaneous, endothermic, and physical adsorption. The adsorption followed the order RhB(-)>RhB(+)>RhB. The adsorption capacity of RhB by NHS18 was found to be very high, and it can be reused at least three times. The adsorption of RhB was found to be dependent on the pH and ionic strength of the solution. The mechanism of RhB adsorption on NHS18 was also discussed. The results indicate that NHS18 has potential application for the removal of RhB from wastewater. Tuesday, September 14, 2012 September 14th This is a story about creating a new lifestyle and the way we fit it into our lives. My husband and I have been married for a little over three years now. We have always dreamed of being homeowners. We both have busy careers, one in sales and one in marketing, and with a house to get and a family to provide for, we decided we needed to make a commitment to each other that would help our dreams become reality. We decided to have our wedding at home, and once we were married, we were determined to build a home. We live in a community where the houses are not the large luxury homes you would find in other areas of the country, but the houses themselves are small, older homes, built in a neighborhood that has been around for years. We took it upon ourselves to make a project
