Get everything you need to know about Remote Access Trojans (RATs), from what they are, the .n client communicates with simple HTTP requests. In this article, we will tell you how to recognize, write and install an anti-XSS (XSS Checker) mod-questionnaire that will show that the protection is not violated. Despite the large number of well-documented and proven methods of attacking SSL, the security issues associated with the use of SSL protocols remain extremely relevant. Of particular note is the problem of XSS-type attacks that occur during the transfer of confidential data between two users using the "cloud" connection model. Support for the SSL protocol is one of the main benefits and features for websites. Continued use of SSL ensures that the site can perform all required functions without arousing suspicion. For example, many SSL-based sites (such as the @gmail.com or @home.com domains) use the "DNS refresh" option to allow them to send data between multiple servers. Or, for an online store that uses Web2TK, public certificates cannot be compromised in the event of a hack, as they are used as certificates at a different nesting level. In addition, many online stores that use SSL 2.0 options protect users and data by adding a policy to ensure that SLS is used during any connection. However, the "cloud" usage model for SSL suggests that it is used elsewhere as well. For example, to encrypt user data on a server running in the "cloud" (not in the usual sense), and in order to send traffic between its cloud and a client web server without the need for additional software, such as antivirus or firewall. In this case, it is necessary that the "clouds" be "registered" in the css and .htaccess files on the hosting, and client applications on servers located in the same cloud use the same settings. In order to be able to work from the "clouds" safely, appropriate policies are needed. Some security solutions do not support user authentication, so users must use multiple passwords. In this case, there are a number of rules and policies that must be created and installed on the entire server. Using local data storage is also
