Background and purpose ===== Ankylosing spondylitis (AS) is known to be an inflammatory disease affecting mainly sacroiliac joints, spine and entheses. However, its pathogenesis is not fully clarified. A complex interplay of genetic, environmental and inflammatory components of AS may be considered. Epigenetics could be the bridge between these factors. For AS pathogenesis, the role of epigenetics is emphasized by the limited success of clinical trials, with potential reasons being small sample sizes, lack of efficacy, or toxicity of AS therapies. The aim of the trial is to test the efficacy of epigenetic therapy (methylene blue) for AS. Materials and methods ===== Patients with a diagnosis of AS received either placebo or methylene blue (5-10 mg/kg per day by nasogastric tube) orally for 10 days and were evaluated clinically at baseline and on days 1, 5, 10, 15, and 30. Disease activity was assessed on a 7-point Likert scale. Methylene blue induced redox changes in patients' leukocytes that were investigated by electron spin resonance spectroscopy. DNA methylation and expression of some genes (CD69, CCL2, TNF, IL-23) were examined by methylation-specific PCR and reverse transcription-polymerase chain reaction. Results ===== 14 patients were enrolled in the clinical trial, 7 in each group. We observed significantly lower disease activity in methylene blue-treated patients as compared to control group in 30 days (mean±SD) -0.94 ± 0.41 vs 0.83 ± 0.38 , p<0.05.
