Field of the Invention The present invention relates to network management, and more particularly to a method and apparatus for managing network connections. 2. Description of the Related Art Computer systems are often connected together within a network to enable the exchange of information between them. Such networks may include, for example, a Local Area Network (LAN), a Wide Area Network (WAN), and/or a combination of the two. One common type of network is a Personal Area Network (PAN), which is a small network that interconnects various portable (mobile) devices, such as cell phones, personal digital assistants (PDAs), wireless handheld computers, pagers, and the like. The IEEE 802.15 standards define various IEEE 802.15.x PAN specifications, which cover radio communications within PANs. Networks are managed to ensure that network equipment is maintained and that network resources are efficiently used.

Network administrators oversee the management of the networks and resources used by the networks. The administrators are responsible for network security by, for example, installing, securing, and maintaining security devices within and outside the network. Network administrators often utilize monitoring tools to monitor data exchanged between network nodes. Typically, the monitoring tools are connected to a management host that is able to handle communications between the network administrator, the network nodes, and the monitoring tools. Network nodes, such as endpoints, gateways, and/or servers, communicate with one another over data networks using various data communication protocols. For example, some communication protocols use data packets to convey network information between the network nodes. Packets are made up of portions which contain the data being conveyed across the network. In some protocols, packets may be programmed to include data or commands that result in communication to other network nodes or resources. Packets often include headers that are associated with the packet. The headers typically include information regarding the source node that sent the packet, the destination node that received the packet, and other relevant packet information. Network connections, such as network connections between network nodes, are managed by managing nodes in the network. However, network connections between network nodes may be mismanaged when a mis

The complete mitochondrial genome (mitogenome) sequence of the cyprinid fish Gobiocypris luochengjiangensis (Teleostei: Cyprinidae) was determined. It is 16,315 bp in length and consists of 13 protein-coding genes, 2 ribosomal RNA genes, 22 transfer RNA genes, and 2 main non-coding regions. The overall base composition of G. luochengjiangensis is A (30.0%), T (29.5%), C (27.1%), and G (16.1%). The AT and CG base composition is 52.7%, the GC content is 31.4% and the A+T content is 55.5%. The complete mitogenome can provide important information for studies on phylogenetic relationships and population genetics. "I feel as I feel," wrote Percy Shelley on the morning of December 1, 1814, from the Italian Island of Leghorn to the English coast. He had married his long-time love, Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin, a month earlier, but, in the letters preceding the ceremony, he had sounded utterly impassioned. "Nothing but my eternal misery... Can withhold me from you longer," he wrote from Florence. "This moment is to me the most blissful in my life. Be mine, my own, my own." The English Romantic poet then set off on a ship that brought his new, joyful wife back to England, only to find that revolution had come to the continent. The next day, upon disembarking at Dover, on the English Channel, Shelley saw a thick darkness on the horizon. Word had arrived that the French Revolution had erupted again, and the new, young King of France, Louis XVIII, was barely 30 years old. Shelley's intense feelings of happiness and his real-world fears for the
