After what has been a wild year, the Bulls are receiving a starry player of the year, maybe the second star if that second star is No. 3 overall or more, or maybe the third star. Larry Bird of the Pacers is the clear favorite. He's a two-time winner (1980-81, '81-82) for the best pro player in the Eastern Conference. He was the top three-point shooter last season, he's a career 48 percent shooter from the field, and while he's not a prolific passer, he does have a deft touch with the ball. They don't have an ideal candidate for the center position, and they don't have anyone to run the point, even though point guard Mike James has been a better passer than he is a scorer. So, another candidate could go No. 1 if he's healthy, not counting among the top of the list, but certainly someone on the list. The Heat's LeBron James, by many accounts the best player in the NBA, is the final guard in a voting group that includes the Celtics' Paul Pierce, the Clippers' Chris Paul and the Grizzlies' Zach Randolph. Paul Pierce has been a top-five player four times. But this is the first season he has been in the top three. He wasn't in that position last season. He was No. 8 at the end of the season and was a little higher in the early going. So, it is a jump. Pierce is a three-time All-Star. He's the only active player who has been selected in the All-Star Game in back-to-back seasons, but he has missed five playoff games in the last six seasons. He is the reigning Sixth Man of the Year, voted on by coaches. He is an elite defender and he is a solid offensive player. He's durable. He plays hard. There's no denying his efficiency. He is a 10-time All-Star, second to Kobe Bryant among active players. He won the 2003-04 Most Valuable Player Award. He has a chance at a second MVP this season and a chance to be the only active player to reach 30,000 points. The Heat are 29-15, third in the Eastern Conference. They have the best record in the East and the best record in the NBA. They are also in the playoffs for the fourth straight year. The Thunder are likely to fall out of the top four, live up to what he is and that's a great quarterback who wants to win. And Eli doesn't." Don't Edit Syracuse football coach Scott Shafer announced on Tuesday that Syracuse's team captains for the 2018 season would be announced after the Orange's spring practices. Don't Edit Don't Edit 3. Shafer has a lot to build on Don't Edit Don't Edit Don't Edit Scott Shafer inherits a Syracuse team that came into last season at 4-8 under first-year head coach Scott Shafer and is expected to come into this season at a more advantageous position. The Orange welcome back five starters on both sides of the ball, including three-year starting quarterback Eric Dungey and All-ACC safety Monty Nelson. The Orange return 14 starters, two more than last season. "We're going to be ready to go. We're going to be excited to start and the focus is going to be on being 10-0. I'm excited about getting back and we're excited about getting the season going," said Nelson. Freshman left guard Brandon Mifsud missed spring practice with a shoulder injury, but, according to head coach Scott Shafer, is going to be ready by fall camp. (Frank Franklin II | AP) Don't Edit 2. Can the Orange compete in the ACC? Don't Edit Don't Edit Don't Edit Syracuse athletic director Daryl Gross stressed on Tuesday he doesn't feel any added pressure being in the ACC for the first time in 25 years. The Orange were brought in as part of the conference football expansion in 2014 and didn't play in the ACC until 2017. "We've got to play our best, put it that way," said Gross. "And we have a great bunch of kids; they believe in what they're doing. We've got to find out a lot about ourselves and what we can be as a program. But I can assure you we're going to play at a high level. "As far as the ACC team, I have no doubt that we're
