luxury he had. He paid for it with a small portion of his small pension and more often with the. He had not asked for it. It was simply there; in the wall of his room. It was a portrait of a young man. He was a brown man, with a round face and a small, pleasant mouth. Not very handsome. An ugly face. An ugly, ugly face. He looked like he was sitting with a sour expression, but, yes, he was just like that. He was young. He did not look to be more than thirty. On his right shoulder he had a tattoo of three words. 'Honor', 'Justice' and 'Truth'. It was a tattoo that would not be removed for the rest of his life. Good. But what did it mean? To an ordinary man it would mean nothing. For that man it would be a tattoo he would remember for the rest of his life, for the rest of his life. For that man, it would mean - freedom. Freedom from the people he had been. He would have to live like an ordinary man. he would have to keep his past as his past. He would have to be free from the money and the big house.. He would have to stay away from his daughters and quit kissing their breasts. He would have to be around for three days instead of three years. A small thing, not much. Just an ordinary man. but for him it meant the world. the freedom to be what he was and to be himself. Anton was a rich man, rich in money and in other things. He was honest. He had an ordinary face. not ugly like that poor man. But Anton was not innocent. He was not unaware of his strength. He had some degree of power. He had a hundred and fifty thousand. It was
