Features Kinect is used to track 22 players' in-game on-field actions, with a view to better replicate the fluidity of real-life movements and help make players more intelligent. Improved ball-tracking means more passes are accurate, while the increased accuracy of defensive interceptions means more chances on goal and more attacks. It also helps create a better sense of the flow of the game. For the first time, detailed 360° integration allows players to take in the whole pitch from any angle in the goal, or have the view blocked by defensive players. In addition, each team has now got a unique quarterback who uses their favourite pass routes and techniques to create a sense of individuality for their players. The further evolution of Total Moments of Joy (TMOJ) with the introduction of Strength and Conditioning (S&C) Sessions now allows players to have individualised training, as their performance is closely linked to their physical fitness. Players can get a sense of their personal fitness levels in relation to their teammates as they train in their individual S&C sessions. Once a match begins, players can observe the results of their S&C in the form of a fitness bar for their teammates, while their own S&C can be monitored by coaches. With new Focus and Awareness Boosts, players can read the game more easily and react faster, while stronger and faster ball-carriers are now more powerful, and stronger in the air. Stifle tackles are now more damaging, and may even force the ball carrier to roll over. Champions will now be more intelligent, while their control and reaction time has been improved, making them better suited to the pitch. Overall, players have grown in intelligence, speed and intensity. New Drills - TE2 and C4 Ultimate Chemistry, C4 S&C, C4 Ultimate Conversion. How a player performs in training when they are placed in certain specific drills. For example, a player who has low ball-carrying momentum goes up for a High Energy Ball Battle against a defender who locks on to him. The energy level of the ball battle determines how well the player will perform in the football match. Teams & Tactics New features include Pressure Mapping, team tactics, A.I. Training, depth-of-play, defender manipulation, improved goalkeeper control and added team-specific attacking and defensive patterns, as well as improved pass and dribble patterns, and a
