The effect of an increase in glucose infusions on aortic norepinephrine and glucose concentrations. Simultaneous arterial and aortic norepinephrine (NE) and glucose concentrations were measured in dogs infused with glucose for three h at 0, 200, and 600 mg.kg-1.min-1. Arterial NE rose significantly with glucose infusion, and aortic NE rose significantly with both glucose infusions. Serum glucose concentration was increased with both infusions and this was associated with a significant rise in the aortic glucose concentration. There was also an increase in the aortic lactic acid concentration with the 600 mg.kg-1.min-1 infusion. The increase in aortic NE was associated with a rise in aortic insulin. These results indicate that an increase in the glucose concentration of the aorta is associated with a redistribution of NE into other tissues. The increased aortic glucose concentration may also play a role in the arterial NE effects.

According to CNBC, the following CEOs made over $1 million in 2016, the year in which their companies earned the most money in the world. It's important to note that these salaries are significantly less than those of other CEOs, and the companies these CEOs oversee also enjoy much more limited profit margins than say, Apple, which has a miniscule profit margin (less than 10%) They also aren't as developed as companies like Apple, and tend to be more reliant on shareholders and boards of directors to keep them solvent. 2. Mark Zuckerberg, CEO of Facebook, made $1.02 billion in 2016.
