of White House press briefings, leakers told reporters they are frustrated with one person in particular on the Trump administration's team: Jared Kushner.
Kushner's role in the administration has become more defined as the year has progressed. But some of his decisions in the year's first month — including his divorce filing — are drawing flak from outsiders. Those who have watched closely and say they are frustrated with his style of decision making and management skills told the Post, "This is a guy who has no people skills," and "He makes decisions that are at odds with the established mind of the staff.” Read the full story on the new Washington Post website here. This invention relates to semiconductor devices, and more particularly to a high-voltage semiconductor device in which a plurality of transistors of the enhancement-mode type are connected in parallel to form a high-voltage semiconductor device. In recent years, liquid crystal displays are finding increasing use as displays for personal computers. A liquid crystal display of the active matrix type in which switching elements are used to drive the liquid crystal, is a promising candidate as a display capable of producing a large-size high-quality picture. A typical active matrix type liquid crystal display has thin-film transistors (TFTs) arranged in a matrix as the switching elements. As is well known in the art, a thin-film transistor is generally formed by using amorphous silicon or polycrystalline silicon, which involves a high-temperature process of about 600.degree. C. to 1000.degree. C. In addition, this high-temperature process is not compatible with other required steps such as a photolithography step, which is indispensable for manufacture of a TFT liquid crystal display, for example. Therefore, in view of the problems of the high-temperature process and photolithography, a thin-film transistor in which a semiconductor film of a single crystal semiconductor such as that of polycrystalline silicon is employed in place of amorphous silicon or a-Si is used for a switching element for driving a matrix of pixels in a TFT liquid crystal display. The type of matrix drive in which the gate electrode of each thin-film transistor is connected Uniparental disomy and segmental duplication are the causes of genomic imprinting defects in mammalian embryos. In the mouse these defects can be investigated using embryonic stem cells (ESCs), which can be differentiated in vitro into any cell type from the embryo. Molecular cytogenetic techniques allow analysis of chromosomal aberrations, but have limited resolution, which is particularly important for the study of early embryos. Moreover, the difficulty of manipulating early embryos makes it hard to analyse the mechanism of the genomic imprinting errors in this lineage. A method for the analysis of imprinted gene clusters was developed using a rabbit satellite DNA probe, which is non-methylated at the 5' CpG and thus preferentially hybridises to the centromeric regions of all non-imprinted chromosomes. In human and mouse ESCs, as well as in mouse embryos, the centromere clusters are non-methylated, whereas the imprinted chromosome 7 has been shown to be heavily methylated in mouse embryos. Thus, methylation analysis of the imprinted gene cluster on chromosome 7 provides indirect evidence of the existence of uniparental disomy and segmental duplication. This approach, using a specific satellite probe, allows the analysis of imprinted genes in early embryos and ESCs in a non-biased manner.

Q: Azure Active Directory Federation Services: OpenID Connect flow With Azure Active Directory Federation Services (AADFS), I'm trying to understand the different flows. I have a connection to an on-premise Active Directory via ADFS (using the OpenID Connect flow). The connection is intended to be used for SSO with a mobile application (that will need to be integrated with Salesforce CRM). To further clarify: The mobile application is consuming resources via a REST API which is serving content to mobile devices. The mobile application must be informed via a web-page where the mobile device (a mobile phone) can accept the SSO to ADFS. Here are the options I
