You can also check out the Photoshop tutorials available for free on the Web at Adobe's website, www.adobe.com/photoshop. Setting up a new project Photoshop has a perfectly normal workspace and it has folders for saving projects. However, to keep the work more organized and to help keep you from losing work if your hard drive crashes, we recommend using Photoshop as a Lightroom Print Presets plug-in, saving your projects as file presets. If you do need to set up a separate project folder, you can keep it in the `Products` folder on your hard drive. You must set up a folder to save a Photoshop project file. The first step is to create a new Photoshop project. After you create your project, you find the folder where the project file is saved, as shown in Figure 16-2. In this project folder, you find the project name, along with a series of other Photoshop files that you will need to complete your project. Figure 16-2: The project folder contains a set of Photoshop files in every project that you save. When you create a new project, choose the type of image that you will be working on, as shown in Figure 16-3. This figure shows a Monochromatic image set. In a monochromatic project, you work exclusively on black-and-white images. Figure 16-3: You can choose from Monochromatic, RGB Color (the default choice), Grayscale, LAB, or other color options. In a RGB project, you work with a combination of colors, or RGB. Each color is represented by a layer in a multiple-layer Photoshop file and you can add, or subtract, colors by using layer styles and choosing a blending mode. You can create a grayscale image in a project file or create a LAB color image. You can also save projects for two-color or four-color work. However, your files become much larger and the layer styles can also become confusing because you can use layer masking on most of the layers in the project. Be prepared to spend a bit more time on the project to complete it. You can set up projects to use preset templates to help you more quickly get started. Check out the chapter Choosing Photoshop Project Presets (available online at www.photoshopforphotographers.com) for more information on how to choose and work

Q: How to disable the mouse click event in WebBrowser in .NET In my .NET project I have a WshBrowser control. I need to do some JavaScript actions which are related to the mouse click events, because I need to stop the click events propagation. I tried using this code :
`_wb.Document.GetElementById("someId").SetAttribute("onmouseup","return false");` But it didn't work. Any idea how to do this? Thanks. A: Try using `JavascriptExecute` var `_ie = _wb.Document.InvokeScript("__ieTabClicks", new object[] { "", false });` Where the `"__ieTabClicks"` is a JavaScript function that disables mouse events. If you don't want to use `JavascriptExecute`, you can try using message hooks :
`private void WndProc(ref Message m) { if (m.Msg == 0x20A) { // Do something } }` Then in the `WndProc` method, do whatever you need to do when the mouse event is disabled (this can be called from both javascript and native) Note : this can only be called from any javascript code within the client (no XMLHttpRequest)

Q: How to get the [high-score] title of an element in a list? Using Python3 and docx, I want to get the title of the highest-score element in a list. The list contains the title of the student and two scores he has achieved. I found the following code online but it seems that I don't manage to find the highest-score object:
