Photoshop is a software tool designed to work with both raster and vector images. The industry standard for web design is to use the Adobe Photoshop format, which is raster-based. When you design a web page, you make it as a raster image. Raster images are what used to be called raster graphics. An image from a camera or scanner is converted to a raster image. An image drawn in a graphics program such as Adobe Illustrator is saved as a vector image. A vector image is where elements are drawn with lines and shapes that are saved as shapes. There is no specific file format for a vector image. A vector image is a very smart kind of image. You can resize it to any size. You can move it around and edit it. You can cut it up, merge it into another image, and drop it onto another image. You can paste it into a print design, and you don't have to worry about what size the print will come out at. You can easily convert a vector image into a bitmap image if you need to. However, you should be careful when you do this because it can become unaligned with the rest of your document. If you need to edit a big image and it's stored as a raster image, be sure to make copies of that image first. Creating your first raster image [Myocardial hypertrophy in rats with abdominal aortic coarctation and hypertension, exposed to long-term hypervolemic hemodilution]. The effect of long-term blood volume depletion, evoked by chronic hypervolemic hemodilution (HHD) upon myocardial hypertrophy has been studied in rats with abdominal aortic coarctation (AAC). This has been associated with the development of hypertension (HT) in both AAC and HHD rats. The degree of the myocardial hypertrophy has been assessed by means of two-dimensional echocardiography and morphological features. Compared to sham operated animals, myocardial hypertrophy was obtained in AAC rats and was more intensive in HHD animals. On the basis of morphometric data one can conclude that the extent of the myocardial hypertrophy is related to the degree of the hyperfunction of the heart manifested by the increase in the mass of the myocardial cells, as well as with the degree of the increase in the volume of the left ventricle.
