It's called "Name That Gitmo, Part Deux." The US government is spending millions of dollars on an elaborate attempt to convince the world that Osama bin Laden is alive and that he is hiding out in an underground lair somewhere in Pakistan. And, although it has garnered very little mainstream attention, the hagiography that the CIA has produced in the process has raised some serious questions about the agency's internal culture. Questions like: Why have several of the major players in the last several years been lured to their deaths by the very CIA officers who promised to keep them alive? And, furthermore, why do the CIA's own memos and videos indicate that the agency knew in advance that their star informant — Ali Soufan — was planning to kill himself after the agency's promise to protect him was shattered? And why did the CIA rescue a man whom the agency believed was a member of Al Qaeda but was in fact an innocent petty drug dealer, and why did the CIA lie about that to the FBI? And, furthermore, why did the CIA involve a far-right paramilitary group, the Free Syrian Army, in the plot to rescue the false bin Laden in Syria? And why did a
