around for the software to perform its tasks. Unfortunately, the app's lack of advanced features is almost impossible to ignore, making it difficult to assess the program as a "must-have" tool. This is in reference to my question here - mvc2 Areas with routing in debug - why not catch 404s Here are my questions, thanks for any help Is there a standard way of dealing with 404s in web apps that are using areas? Say if there's a resource that is included in an area (i.e. a controller or a view) but isn't actually found - will it just raise a 404 for that resource when you go to it? Or do you just handle 404s in your global layout, and then redirect to a 404 page of your choosing?

installer scripts, it's time you also know InstallShield Wizard. In other words, you can consider it the InstallShield equivalent of a Visual Studio plugin to deal with WiX.exe. The add-in to Microsoft's.NET development suite will be released later this month and, based on the same commercial version that was found in Visual Studio 2010, a version for Visual Studio 2013 and Visual Studio 2015 will be available also. As you might know, InstallShield is usually used to create installers for Windows Installer packages and InstallShield Wizard will be ideal for those with Microsoft's package creation experience, as it has been designed to boost InstallShield's XML technology and to provide with more features for installing Windows applications.

To create custom Windows Installer packages, you'll need to have the Windows SDK installed on your system and, in order to create MSI packages, you will also need Microsoft's ISPP or ISPP for Windows Installer (to which you can also install the Windows SDK separately, but, if you do so, you will no longer have access to the.NET Framework). As for the same reasons, the package creation wizard should come in handy in situations where you need a tool that can be used to create installers for Windows programs. InstallShield Wizard to the rescue As the name might suggest, InstallShield Wizard is the tool that will allow you to create installers for Windows applications, although it can also create installers for.NET applications that have been created using Visual Studio or for Direct3D components, among others. To create installers for Windows applications, you can right-click on a Windows program and choose InstallShield Wizard from the context menu or you can go to the Add/Remove Programs window of Microsoft's Control Panel and then press the "Search" button, located near the bottom of the list of apps. Once that's done, you can use the wizard's main window to create a new package, select the installation location, select the options you want to add to the application and choose the MSI template you'd like to use for your package. If you're new to package creation, you can use the wizard to learn about those, as it includes an excellent user guide that will explain the whole process in a great deal of detail
