Football fans throughout Indiana congregate in places like Purdue's Memorial Stadium and Indiana's West Stadium to play what the Pontiac Bandit dubbed "craps" last year. Flag football is a fast-paced game played with no pads and, typically, with referees. Many in the sports world believe players at the University of Indiana are doing some exploring during their offseason to give the game a try. The Hoosiers scored points during the NIT last season after their season ended and played a post-season tournament in Puerto Rico the following month, winning two games. The Hoosiers also took part in a number of games played by high school teams last year, but one of those was in the state's first-ever Flag Football Tournament. The Hoosiers didn't play in any of the semifinals last month, but the score of one of the games looks like this: A player for Florida A&M University's football team fell down as the game moved to this point. The Gators did not score in that instance, but four other players from the game picked up
